

Dublin, June 16. 1854.

Dear Mr. May

I have seen your last letter to Miss Weston in which you give down further news on the Standard affair. I do not think the Pottersburg feels you any deeper than an unfeeling party that enough has been said of it, that he has not talked of it to any, even in his very slightest letter - or, if in them, in the very slightest way. I am sorry my letter to you called forth the slightest unfeeling party, in his hands or yours. If there was any fault or mistake it was mine, and perhaps on the which no harm has been done to any body. Only we have better hopes to the Pottersburg in connexion with it any more.

Port pillars! he is few hours off. I had a letter from him yesterday from Miss Weston, where I left him about a week ago. The fact to make and remain to go. The fact to make perfectly, absolutely, to hold the fact perfectly, all out of the way, that I hope he will be with us as soon as he can ~~can~~ reach us. Dublin with him till the 20th. Here he will be as welcome & as much at home as if he was with a brother in the flesh. Which is a real pleasure for us than his company & to be far to him.

He is on the W. L. Semin. Francis Jackson of Wm. Phillips has greatly aided him for their kind attention to my old friend Many Marshallton. This was exceedingly gratifying and naturally interested by the opportunity of seeing so many persons whom she had previously reported so much. ~~The~~ He is at E. L. has he any recollection of Lucy ever fled the light of his manhood? — Yours ever truly

John Mabb
